This, it seems, must be the outpouring of a young man who has been told that the right thing for one to do is to assert one's self.

The Search for the Man Who Can.

W. Bourke Cockran, in Success: There is but one straight road to suc cess, and that is merit. The man who is successful is the man who is useful. Capacity never lacks opportunity. It cannot remain undiscovered, because i is sought by too many anxious to utilize it. A capable man on earth is more valuable than any precious deposit under the earth, and the object of a much more vigilant search. Whoever undertakes to build a house, to cultivate a farm, to work a mine, to obtain relief from pain, to maintain a legal controversy, or to perform any function of rersy, or to perform any function or ivilized life, is actively searching for ther men qualified to aid him. To ap-preciate the thoroughness of the search t is necessary only to realize the num-per of persons engaged in all these butsuits and undertakings throughout pursuits and undertakings throughout the world. From such a search no form of ability can remain concealed. If the possessor of capacity sought to hide himself he would be discovered and induced to employ his ability for the benefit of those who need it.

To be successful, then, one has but to qualify himself thoroughly for some occupation. Everyman has some natural aptitude. In these days the training by which natural aptitude is developed into effective ability can be obtained by every youth. No man can hope to be the best in any field of labor, but every one can hope to be among hope to be the best in any ficial of labor, but every one can hope to be among the best. Time occupied in werrying about opportunities, openings and starts is time wasted, because to every capable man a "start" and an "opportunity" are always furnished by the necessities of all other men.

Precepts and Promises. Macauley says of Plit that he could pour forth a long succession of stately periods without premeditation, in a voice of clivery clearness. Perhaps be eached the zenith of oraxorical fame in his speech on the abolition of the slave trade. Fox, Gray, Windham, contem-poraries and themselves adepts at the art of speaking, agreed that it was the most extraordinary display of eloquence ever heard. Where is that speech? A memory only. * * * We have an American unalogue in Webster. There he stood before an entranced Congress, his very soul blazing in these deep cay erns below his marble browns he poured forth his "Reply to Hayne," statement was argument, his inference was demonstration." Where is that speech? How could be who said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gos pel to every creature," be an Essene On purification, the Sabbath, the resurrection. Jesus was in diametric opposi tion to that strictest and tiniest of sects. To affirm identity on finding a point or two of similarity is unphiloso-phical in the extreme. * * Apart from, infinitely above, the rabbi on the one hand and the Essene on the other, Jesus stands the original and unceasing teacher of the race. He speaks with authority to the universal human heart. illustrating, inspiring, empowering 1 He is not a channel through which truth flows perturbed, perchance ,an corrupted with human prejudice and error in its passage. So he could say not only, "I speak the truth," but, "I am Truth." He is the original source, not the transmitter. A fountain, not a con-. . . Again, he is not the institutor of a system of doctrine, not the formulator of a ritual. He comes to inspire a life in the soul, to set up a kingom within, which consists not in the externalities and comparative triviali ties of sacrifice and obtation, but in that indispensable righteousness whose con comitants are peace and joy. So he could say also, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." * * * It has now been nearly two thousand years since an audience gathered on a hilltop to hear a certain Galilean.
